

rous, he assumed responsibility for them, but Colonel Seely still accepts the sole and the fullest responsibility." Mr. Balfour's motion to reject the consolidated fund bill, which provided the pretext for the debate, was defeated, 211 to 222. The resignation of Colonel Seely followed quickly after publication of the "little paper" giving details of the crisis in the British army, whose officers refused to participate in active operations against the inhabitants of Dier, who had prepared to offer armed resistance to introduction of home rule.

Colonel Seely, in his valedictory address to the House of Commons, denied that King George had taken any initiative of any kind in the army crisis. He said:

"The suggestion is absolutely without foundation in the broadest sense. His Majesty took no initiative of any kind."

Want Morley to Resign.
Lord Morley, in his address to the House of Lords, made the important admission that the two unauthorized paragraphs added to the Government were drafted by Lord Morley. In consultation with Lord Morley, the Conservative morning papers, commenting on this admission, contend that Lord Morley, who holds the office of Lord President of the Council, also should resign.

Prohibition is Invalid.
Belfast, March 25.—The Assize Court today decided that the government prohibition of importation of arms into Ireland was invalid. The decision was rendered in an action for damages by a merchant from whom six cases of arms had been seized.

Views of Morning Papers.
London, March 25.—The view of the Liberal morning papers is that though yesterday's decision of the Assize Court was a severe blow to the government, it was not a fatal one. The papers, however, are not without their criticisms. The "Morning Post," for example, says it may be that the Curragh incident, by which the government and popular liberties at one blow, would be found to have been one of the most fortunate episodes for the government in this prolonged struggle.

The "Express" asserts that all general officers commanding divisions throughout England have been ordered to report at the War Office between 11 and 12 o'clock today.

The "Morning Post," still insisting on the existence of a plot and urging the Government to take more drastic measures to divide the nature of the verbal instructions given to General Asquith and Lord Morley, says that the two clauses to the guarantee of the Government of Ireland are not only a guarantee to prevent the disclosure of the Government's policy, but also a guarantee to prevent the disclosure of the Government's policy.

The "Daily Mail," on Tuesday night, when the additions to the Government letter became known, Chancellor Lloyd George threatened to resign, but when the matter came before the House yesterday it became evident that Mr. Asquith's action involved Mr. Asquith's resignation. It was impossible for the Government to resign without the sanction of the House of Commons. Hence the Chancellor of the Exchequer withdrew his offer.

PRESIDENT HUERTA IN BEST OF HEALTH

Difficulties of Past Year Leave No Stamp Upon His Features.

TAKES THINGS AS THEY COME

Conducts Democratic Regime, and Does Not Like Formalities.

Mexico City, March 25.—After a year in office, General Huerta appears in better health than when he undertook the presidency. The difficulties he has met have left no stamp upon his features. He is still the same man, with the same calm, steady gaze, and the same air of confidence and ease. He does not seem to have been affected by the strain of his position, and his features are as fresh and vigorous as when he first took office.

"Take things as they come" seems to be the life-long philosophy of Huerta. He does not seem to have been affected by the strain of his position, and his features are as fresh and vigorous as when he first took office. He does not seem to have been affected by the strain of his position, and his features are as fresh and vigorous as when he first took office.

Another Bulletin dispatch says that General Huerta, who has been in office for a year, is in better health than when he undertook the presidency. The difficulties he has met have left no stamp upon his features. He is still the same man, with the same calm, steady gaze, and the same air of confidence and ease.

on the American side. Guardia is somewhere south of Nuevo Laredo, and marching to that city.

At the headquarters of General Antonio Villalaz, the military commander, near Guerrero, the rebels killed was given as nine, with thirty-three wounded. The Federal loss was unknown, but was estimated at fifty. Many bodies were found in the hills near Guerrero. The rebels, who were expected to meet the Constitutionalists near to Matamoros, which was the objective point of the Federal campaign.

The rebels had four cannons and two machine guns. They were armed with such accuracy that the Federal forces were forced four times to change the position of their artillery.

Fear Attack on Nuevo Laredo.
Laredo, Tex., March 25.—The Federal remnants of the 1200 Federalists with which General Guardia set out to attack the rebel forces at Matamoros, Mexico, returned to Nuevo Laredo today, minus ammunition, supplies and a large part of their active force, the result of the battle on Monday at Guerrero which ended in the rout of the Federalists. To-night preparations are being made to resist a possible attack on Nuevo Laredo. After the night at Guerrero, Guardia and his forces retreated to San Ignacio, and not counting the rebels, who were estimated at 1200 troops, only half that number remained to march back to Nuevo Laredo.

Seventy are killed, according to reports. The other 700, General Guardia's forces, were reported to have been killed. The rebels, who were expected to meet the Constitutionalists near to Matamoros, which was the objective point of the Federal campaign.

and he rapidly rose to the front rank of the Staunton bar, then adorned by some of the great legal luminaries of this state. He was a successful Commonwealth's attorney and city attorney of Staunton.

But we do not know not only of his great professional success, without the diligent attention, especially of young men, to his chosen profession, but of his character, to the lesson which it teaches of perseverance and strenuous effort, undaunted by difficulties and undismayed by the vicissitudes of fortune, which would have broken the spirit and quenched the ambition of a less manly character.

But when the reward came it came abundantly. He had the honor of a reputation as a student and thinker on the problems of public law aided by the fact that he was a member of the Virginia Bar Association from August 1891 to 1901. He was made chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Code of Virginia, and was also a member of the Committee on the Revision of the Code of Virginia.

His speech on the question of the revision of the Code of Virginia, which was a masterpiece of logic and marshaling of facts and wide range of argument, has been a landmark in the history of the Code of Virginia. It was the author of this chapter and it supplies a monument more enduring than any material monument could be. It is a monument to his life and to his work.

to cover his retreat. For three hours these men held the position, possibly making a perilous stand or covering a retreat. Meanwhile Guardia's main force, which was in a position to strike, was not able to do so.

A Federal sergeant, who escaped to the United States, has reported that Guardia attempted to sacrifice the lives of his men of the Twenty-ninth Infantry to save the major portion of his command.

The sergeant said the rebels were disposed about the outskirts of the town and on housetops, where they kept up a running fire, under cover of which the rebels retreated rapidly. It was not until 4 o'clock that the rebels were forced to retreat.

The sergeant said it took him about two hours to reach the Rio Grande, and that he was the only one of his men who escaped. He was captured by the rebels, but he managed to escape.
